

Central Intelligence Agency

Washington, D. C. 20505

DIRECTORATE OF INTELLIGENCE

27 September 1983

Security Conditions in Japan
During President Reagan's Visit

25X1

President Reagan is unlikely to face a direct threat to his personal security during his visit to Japan [redacted]

25X1

Japan has long sought to maintain close ties with the United States, and Prime Minister Nakasone, who is determined to strengthen alliance relations, will do everything he can to ensure the President's safety. Japanese security agencies are fully capable of handling potential threats. [redacted]

25X1

25X1

Prospects for large-scale demonstrations are very small. [redacted]

25X1

[redacted] If [redacted] demonstrations do occur, they are likely to be small, orderly, and nonviolent. [redacted]

25X1

25X1

While the potential for action by international terrorists can never be ignored, we do not believe that the President's trip represents an attractive opportunity for them. Even under [redacted]

25X1

25X1

25X1

This memorandum was prepared by [redacted] Japan Branch, Northeast Asia Division, Office of East Asian Analysis. Comments and queries are welcome and may be directed to the Chief, Japan Branch, Northeast Asia Division, OEA [redacted]

25X1

25X1

EA M 83-10224

25X1

25X1

ordinary circumstances, foreign terrorists would find Japan difficult to infiltrate and an inhospitable area in which to operate. [REDACTED]

25X1

25X1

The fanaticism of the Japan Red Army (JRA) and its access to a possible domestic support base would make it a plausible candidate for terrorist activity if it were still active in Japan. [REDACTED]

25X1

25X1

25X1

[REDACTED] Moreover, JRA supporters in Japan lack direction and organization. [REDACTED]

25X1